5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

Well, that was different. For the past 17 years, Patriots fans have been the ones used to miracles benefiting them. That was not the case at Whatever-the-Hell-They're-Calling-It-This-Week Stadium on Sunday as the Dolphins pulled off one of the most incredible game-winning plays in NFL history. It's kind of feeling these days like the Patriots' mojo is running out. You kept waiting for that big Patriots moment to happen in the Super Bowl against the Eagles and it just never came. Now, they're losing regular-season games in extraordinary ways. They also made some very un-Patriot-like plays on Sunday — including the botched play before the half in which they left points on the board. For more on the Patriots, please see page 9.

1 MURRAY APOLOGIZES FOR HOMOPHOBIC TWEETS

Kyler Murray celebrated his Heisman Trophy win in New York on Saturday night, but not long after the Oklahoma quarterback found himself playing defense. Murray issued an apology via Twitter for using homophobic slurs in social media messages that remained active into the early hours of Sunday morning. Those Twitter posts have since been deleted following Murray's statement. "I apologize for the tweets that have come to light tonight from when I was 14 and 15. I used a poor choice of word that doesn't reflect who I am or what I believe. I did not intend to single out any individual or group," Murray said. The since-deleted tweets had a timestamp that indicate the posts were from a 15-year-old Murray. The Heisman night social media sting is the latest in a trend of resurfacing the existing social media activity, however dated, of athletes following major achievements. Murray, also an OU baseball player drafted ninth overall by the Oakland A's in July, plans to report to spring training in 2019 after his collegiate football career concludes, though some have suggested he might opt to head to the NFL instead.

2 MANAFORT PARDON A 'TERRIBLE MISTAKE': RUBIO

President Donald Trump would make a "terrible mistake" if he pardoned his former campaign Chairman Paul Manafort after charges brought as a result of the federal probe into Russian election interference, Republican Sen. Marco Rubio said on Sunday. "I just think it would be the wrong thing to do and I think it would be a huge political mistake as well," Rubio said on CNN's "State of the Union." Manafort faces sentencing on his convictions in August of tax and bank fraud charges. In a court filing on Friday, Special Counsel Robert Mueller said Manafort lied to investigators about his interactions with a Russian tied to Russian intelligence services. That filing detailed why Mueller's office last week retracted a plea agreement with Manafort. He pleaded guilty in September to two conspiracy charges and agreed to cooperate with investigators in hopes of a lighter sentence. Trump has not ruled out a pardon for Manafort and has praised him as a good man. In contrast, he has said his former longtime "fixer" Michael Cohen, who has cooperated with federal prosecutors, should go to jail.

4 CHINA TO US: WITHDRAW HUAWEI ARREST WARRANT

China's foreign ministry called in the U.S. ambassador on Sunday to lodge a "strong protest" over the arrest in Canada of Huawei Technologies Co. Ltd's chief financial officer, and said the United States should withdraw its arrest warrant. Meng Wanzhou, Huawei's global chief financial officer, was arrested in Canada on Dec. 1 and faces extradition to the United States, which alleges that she covered up her company's links to a firm that tried to sell equipment to Iran despite sanctions. The executive is also the daughter of the founder of Huawei. Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Le Yucheng told U.S. ambassador Terry Branstad that the United States had made an "unreasonable demand" on Canada to detain Meng while she was passing through Vancouver, China's Foreign Ministry said. "The actions of the U.S. seriously violated the lawful and legitimate rights of the Chinese citizen, and by their nature were extremely nasty," Le told Branstad, comments similar to those he made to Canada's ambassador the night before. "China strongly urges the U.S. to pay attention to China's solemn and just position and withdraw the arrest warrant."

5 TRANSGENDER FIGHTER WINS HISTORIC PRO DEBUT

Patricio Manuel made boxing history on Saturday night, becoming the first transgender male to fight professionally in the United States. Manuel, 34, beat Hugo Aguilar by unanimous decision in Indio, Calif., on a Golden Boy Boxing fight card. Afterward, as he heard some detractors in the audience, Manuel vowed to continue fighting and try to win them over. "I hear some fans aren't happy, it's OK, I'll be back. I'll make them happy then," Manuel said during his in-ring interview. Manuel began his transition to male shortly after being eliminated in the 2012 U.S. Olympic Trials, having withdrawn after one fight with an injury. He eventually convinced the California Boxing Commission to approve an amateur license after it had hesitated with the unprecedented decision. That led to a pair of amateur fights — he won the first in a three-round decision and lost the second — before his pro debut on Saturday night. Fresh off the win over Aguilar, Manuel insisted he's looking to a future in the ring. "I'm not in here just for one show, for one fight," he said. "This is something I love. I'm not done with this sport. I'll be back."

Revolutionary Clinics dispensary debuts cannabis coffee pods

Cannabis-infused coffee and apple cider pods are among the Cambridge dispensary's newest products.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

In the budding marijuana industry, people are finding more ways to consume cannabis, from the traditional toke to a THC-infused frozen pizza. Now, Revolutionary Clinics, a dispensary in Cambridge and Somerville, has another option: cannabis-infused coffee, apple cider and more brew-at-home beverages.

Revolutionary Clinics has launched a line of hot and cold cannabis-infused beverage pods called Mile 62 Cafe that can be brewed in any at-home machine. Revolutionary claims they're the first to offer such products in the state.

The latest release is the cannabis coffee pod, which contains 8.5 milligrams of THC and features locally roasted Karma Coffee from Sudbury. Revolutionary Clinics also has cannabis-infused apple cider and plans to launch lemonade, tea and hot chocolate.

Each beverage pod will have a specific amount of THC, CBD or CBN, another cannabinoid that reportedly has sedative properties. That one will definitely be in the to-come sleepy-time herbal tea, said Tom Schneider, Revolutionary Clinics' chief marketing officer.

"Cannabis calms you down and it makes you feel good or euphoric, if you will, but it will help you sleep," he said. "So a cup of tea before bed is kind of a nice way to go."

CBD coffee has exploded onto the market, Schneider notes, and has been reported to alleviate anxiety and pain and work as an anti-inflammatory. As a medical marijuana dispensary, Revolutionary Clinics is ramping things up with their cannabis coffee so it can provide more benefits.

The pods that will contain CBD will also have THC, likely in a ratio of four parts CBD to one part THC, Schneider said, though this isn't finalized. That same ratio appears in other Revolutionary Clinics products.

"It has been reported that the CBD [brings] down the psychoactive effects of THC," Schneider said. "Apparently it's also reported THC helps deliver the CBD into your system faster. With a little part of THC, you're not going to be walking around like you're stoned, but you will feel better."

Bay State baker goes for gold

Douglas Phillips is just a few treats away from winning "Holiday Baking Championship."

matthew.juul@metro.us

Another Massachusetts culinary star is proving his chops on a food competition series. Ayer's own Douglas Phillips, a baking and pastry instructor at North Shore Community College, has made it to the final four of Food Network's "Holiday Baking Championship" and hopes to punch his ticket to the finale on Monday night. Ahead of the penultimate episode, we caught up with Phillips to chat about his journey to the show, the essentials to great holiday treats and more.

What inspired you to get into baking?
I was about 16 when I started working at a cake shop. I had been working as a short-order cook doing savory stuff and I decided that there wasn't as much artistry in it. I know that there's a lot of culinary savory cooks that'd have me filleted for that. There is artistry on the culinary side, but I was more drawn to the artistry of baking a pastry. It's a harder spot to be in, I think, because when someone goes to a restaurant, they're almost guaranteed to eat dinner. But they're not always guaranteed to eat dessert, so you have to entice, not only with your flavors or how it sounds. There are challenges you face that are more unique.

"Holiday Baking Championship" airs Mondays at 9 p.m. FOOD NETWORK

So what made you want to showcase your skills on this competition series?
My wife, in not so many terms. Food Network contacted the restaurant I was working at. They passed the message along to me and I waited a few days before calling them back because I was not interested. This is not something I've ever done or ever wanted to do. Looking back at it, I'm so glad that I did it, but it was nothing that ever interested me. Contests or competitions, I just wasn't that kind of person. But my wife was like, "Why not? What do you have to lose? Go try it out."

What was the most challenging aspect of competing on the show?
The timing is really strict. You have 90 minutes to make something you might make in two days. It becomes about what can I pare back or how can I do this in the absolute most efficient way.

What's the key to serving up great baked goods during the holidays?
Things that people expect. If there's something that someone makes every year because everyone loves it, it should appear the next year. I love holiday cookies. You've got your gingerbread, your sugar cookies. My aunt always made baklava. My mom always made sugar spritz cookies that come out of a little gun. I always love those. My grandmother made pies. Keep it simple with things like that.

There's a lot of science that goes into baking. How do you balance that aspect with the artistry of baked goods?
I really love the science of baking a pastry. I do a lot of research. Right now I'm reading several books based on it. I think understanding it really allows you to move forward in ways you didn't think before. The way that you develop is by ratios. When I'm on the show, I'm thinking about what ratios make a cake, what ratios make a cookie. From there, you just adjust. I want this to be a cinnamon, so I change this to cinnamon. I want this to be a fruit cake or this or that. The science behind it is the reason you can succeed. That's the reason that I have in my career succeeded so greatly. Understanding the fundamentals is what makes you great in the long run. It's like anything.

How autism break rooms can bring more inclusion to school sporting events

St. Joseph's University recently introduced this concept, with outstanding results.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

On Sunday, Dec. 2, Philly college basketball fans filled the Hagan Arena to watch the St. Joseph's University Hawks play against the Villanova Wildcats.

While the game was a narrow loss for the Hawks, the university had what may have been a huge victory that could change the way large sporting events on a national level. St. Joseph's is the only school in the country to introduce autism break rooms to its sporting events so that fans of all ages who live with autism spectrum disorder (ASD) can enjoy on their own level.

The first of these rooms was designed and is staffed by experts at the university's nationally recognized Kinney Center who have also trained volunteers known as "game-day leaders" on how they can best support families who need to take advantage of the room's services. The break room has been stocked with "sensory-friendly items" such as stress balls, bean bag chairs, bounce boards, weighted blankets, noise-canceling headphones, and more. This room will be a perfect place for Hawks fans to go and take a breather all while enjoying the game up close.

According to Joseph McCleery, executive director of academic programs at the Kinney Center for Autism, providing a space of inclusion for fans on the spectrum can be one of the most effective ways to pique the interests of sports fans with ASD and to help them have a healthier relationship with sports and physical activity.

"People on the spectrum are people," says Dr. McCleery. "They're varied quite a bit. ... Just like other people, there are some people on the spectrum who are interested and others who are less interested. For those people on the spectrum who are more interested in sports, whether it's playing or just being a superfan and observing, they might still shy away from the games. So our break room is not just for children on the spectrum, it is for adults on the spectrum as well."

As it turned out, the inaugural game day for St. Joseph's break rooms was a success, with 10 people using the room for about 10-15 minutes at a time and with many people returning a couple of times during the game. Dr. McCleery views this as such a success in that each of these fans was able to return to the game once they had calmed down from the sensory spectacle of the event, as normally the alternative would be to leave the arena.

By providing an environment of inclusion at sporting events, people with ASD will also build more confidence to try to engage in physical activity and exercise after witnessing what goes on on the court in between plays and half-time. By introducing this new sense of obtainability into their lives, Dr. McCleery has found that it can do wonders for the treatment of people who are on the spectrum.

"We find that if you do the right activity, for example, if you don't focus on competition and winning and you focus more on participation and enjoyment, people on the spectrum are more willing to engage in those actions," explains Dr. McCleery.

"Similarly, instead of a teacher telling someone what to do, actually running with them or playing soccer with them is a great way to help motivate people on the spectrum. Just like anyone, you don't necessarily just want to be told what to do. You want them to speak with their actions.

"Having good models is really important for everyone and if people on the spectrum can't go to these games, then they won't have those models."

Pats tricked by Fins

Patriots fall to 9-4 with loss to Miami.

MATTHEW BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

Devin McCourty (No. 32) of the New England Patriots tackles Kenny Stills (No. 10) of the Miami Dolphins. GETTY IMAGES

The Patriots were seconds away on Sunday from moving to 10-3 and gaining solid control of a first-round bye in the AFC playoffs. A miracle in Miami, however, flipped the script and the Pats will likely have to win out to nail down one of the top two seeds.

The Patriots held a 33-28 lead with 21 seconds remaining as the fans at Hard Rock Stadium filtered out, but an all-time game-winning play for a touchdown incredibly dealt the Pats a 34-33 loss. Initial receiver Kenny Stills tossed a lateral pass to DeVante Parker, and Parker flipped one to Kenyan Drake, who got several huge blocks down the field to beat the Patriots defense for the game-winning TD.

"I kind of blacked out," Drake told CBS Sports with the leftover crowd in Miami still humming with hysteria. "We practice it all the time. It's not the best situation to be in, but it worked to perfection. They made some hell of some blocks out there. It's all about getting the win."

The Patriots have now dropped five of their last six games in Miami.

There was plenty of good by the Pats that was overshadowed by that final special teams gaffe, which saw lumbering tight end Rob Gronkowski as the "safety" on the Patriots defense during the Miami miracle.

Offensively, Gronk had his best game since Week 1 as he caught eight passes for 107 yards and a touchdown. Josh Gordon (five catches, 96 yards) and Julian Edelman (nine catches, 86 yards) also had big games.

Yardage-wise, Brady had his best game of the 2018 season as he passed for 358 yards while completing 27-of-43 passes. No. 12 posted three TD passes on the day with zero picks.

But the Patriots defense, which looked elite a week earlier against the Vikings, was routinely burned by Ryan Tannehill, Stills, Frank Gore, and even Brandon Bolden on Sunday.

Tannehill was an efficient 14-of-19 for 265 yards, three touchdowns and zero interceptions while posting a 155.2 passer rating. Stills caught eight balls for 135 yards and a TD.

An incredible special teams day by the Patriots' Albert McClellan will also be forgotten by this afternoon. McClellan, who signed with the Patriots in November after being cut by the Ravens, had two punt blocks in the first half on Sunday.
